INTRODUCTION

From the Chief

Message from The Chief

At the Chapel Hill Police Department, our mission is simple and meaningful: we serve, protect, and partner with our community — and it drives us every day.

We're pleased to share we've seen decreases in crimes against people as well as fewer stolen vehicles and less theft from stolen vehicles. During this period, we assigned a special team of officers to handle these cases and increase patrols in order to discourage these crimes.

In this report, we strive to highlight the ways we're using data and building relationships, all to help make Chapel Hill a place where everyone thrives.

Thank you for taking the time to read it!

Celisa Lehew
Chapel Hill Chief of Police

Engaging with the Community

February - Red vs. Blue Games

The Police and Fire Departments battled in the Red vs. Blue games by completing daily workouts and recording their progress. CHPD won the challenge with the victory aided greatly by Captain Todd Harris and Sgt. Jason Bellavance who did workout runs to all five of the fire stations and took photos with the firefighters.

Stars of Honor

Stars of Honor celebrates local youth by recognizing their achievements both academically and in the community. They are able to attend UNC Chapel Hill sporting events and our officers are there to celebrate with them.

Chapel Hill police officers helped put together Kits for Kids (K4K) a compassion-driven initiative created to comfort children facing distressing emergency situations. Each kit includes a notepad, crayons, multiple fidget toys and puzzles, and a handwritten note from first responders providing encouragement. Kits for Kids are kept in patrol vehicles for officers to hand out when children need comfort during emergencies.

June - Open Chapel Hill Day

The free townwide open house invited community members to take tours of facilities, do fun activities, and meet staff. At the police department kids tried on gear, sat in patrol cars, and watched a K9 demonstration. The Police Department was a popular stop during the event!
